

Cooping them over

JACK KELLY

If you insist on avoiding unpleasant facts, you are almost certain to find yourself in a jam far more unpleasant than the facts you should have faced earlier.

Leut-Corn. Gene Tunney, athletic director of the United States Navy, and John R. Kelly, director of civilian physical fitness for the U. S. government, both declare that the United States has not equaled Germany in making her young men physically fit for war.

In other and plainer words, the youth of the United States is not as physically fit as the youth of Germany.

"You are a sucker if you take your opponent for a set-up and don't declare Tunney. I never took an opponent for a set-up and most any good fighter will tell you he didn't either."

"What the young men of our armed forces need are bundles of boxing gloves and skipping ropes instead of tons of cigarettes. Joe Louis didn't do that amazing job on Buddy Bare the other night because he had trained for a few weeks. Louis was a devastating destroyer because he has lived right for many years."

"There you have the plant of a world champion fighter on what he took to win. Don't pass it over lightly. Tunney isn't taking for publicity now—he's in there shooting the works in deadly earnest."

The Point That is Missed

It is hardly necessary to point out that conditions in the United States closely parallel those in Canada, so we, too, can face the facts.

To most folks it seems strange that a country in which boys and girls take such an active part in sports as they do in Canada should have any worry about physical fitness.

The point that the great majority of people fail to understand is that playing baseball, hockey, basketball, and such games does not necessarily make a boy fit for physical combat. There is a great difference between the combative power and endurance of a fit boxer or wrestler and the combative power and endurance of a star hockey player, track athlete or tennis player.

The physical fitness that is required for the ideal warrior on land, sea or in the air, is a fitness of every muscle, perfect co-ordination, stamina, confidence that comes only with muscles that are itching for action and a reserve of energy that must be stored up through right living and right exercise.

Boxers and wrestlers will know the physical condition I am trying to picture. They are among the few athletes who achieve it because their training demands that all organs and muscles be developed to the highest possible degree. Wind, legs and arms are all a boxer plays with. Timing, legs and fast eyes are the "muscle" for ball players. Golf is 98 per cent wind, magnificent co-ordination and timing.

PRIMAVAL achieved her standard of physical fitness through mass gymnastics and exercises that were approximately those used by boxers and wrestlers. There she put her boys and girls out in sunshine and made a fine, bronzed physique a mark of distinction. German youth held miles through the country, ran, jumped, swam, camped out for days on end and hardened in the wind and sun. Undeveloped biceps may not make you good your legs and torso might be it was stigma. The same stigma to massive chests and biceps on men with spindly legs. They might be fit in some ways, but not completely fit.

No one can say that Canadians and Americans have been blind to the beauties of the human physique, but we certainly have come to admire a type that is almost a surmise to our survival. We have, to a large extent, fastidiously turned from strength and virility to a type that might have been conceived by some slightly perverted artist.

The long-legged, narrow-hipped, skiny type of girl that Hollywood glamorizes has been accepted as ideal, whereas she is exactly what an ideal woman should not be. The ideal has set a much better standard for male physique, but still the average male star is a pretty disappointing gent when you meet him in gym shorts.

We have put too much emphasis on brain power. What we need is brain power, set in both body and mind, and a frame-work of energy and stamina from toes to the top of the head. In our dissipated years of peace we have lost a lot of what it takes to win tough wars.

Busy Night For Goalties

Springfield Indians Beat Hornets In Wild Scorchation

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Scoring six goals in the second period, Springfield Indians defeated Pittsburgh Hornets 8-5 Wednesday night in a wild scoring American League hockey game.

Parisians Jam Arenas For Sake Of Warmth

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—German map occupation, strangely enough, boosted sports attendance in France beyond the wildest dreams of the more ambitious promoters.

Just before the outbreak of the war, the Palais des Sports, which, with its 21,300 seats, was sold out a week in advance. The lake was 80,000 francs.

The same pair recently fought at Dickson's Palais des Sports, which, with its 21,300 seats, was sold out a week in advance. The lake was 80,000 francs.

"Everything is up," says Dickson, the Maple Leaf captain, who returned to Paris following World War I to rival the late Rickard as the greatest of all sports promoters. Football play-offs drew 70,000 last night. So did tennis and hockey—even fencing.

Dickson has promoted in all the European capitals. He also has the Palais des Sports in Brussels, where he says the situation is even more tense than it is in Paris.

Dickson, here for duration, meanwhile is reconstructing historical southern forts as show places. He rebuilt Fort Bouda, which dates back to 1700, at Metz, his old home town, where he also made a highly profitable attraction of The Devil's Punch Bowl, a freak of nature in the form of a tremendous hole in the ground, which long ago was an outlaw rendezvous.

Jeff Dickson, above, is now back in his native United States, slipping out of France before the Germans declared war on the U. S. Dickson was the king of sport promoters on continental Europe and was a gracious host to the Edmonton Sunbirds when they made their European hockey tour some nine or ten years ago. He says German occupation of France has boosted sport attendance, there being nothing else—food, clothing or amusement—for the French to spend their money on.

Having no place to go and being hungry and cold, the French come to fights at 8 p.m. to huddle together and keep warm. Half of them don't even look at the fight. They just sit around and buzz.

"The German philosophy of occupation is identical. They permit the French to go in for sports in a big way, but they expect a quart of beer and a cigarette for their trouble. The French will not attend German films," he explains.

Alberta's choice of three contestants for the annual Western Intercollegiate Athletic Union "Assault at Arms" fencing tournament to be staged here on February 28 are Gordon Greenwood and Ben Samuel of this city, and Aubrey Olsen of Saskatoon. All three are students at the University of Alberta.

Elimination tournament was held Wednesday night at Athabasca gymnasium. No girls' team was selected this year, but an exhibition contest between U. of A. coeds and a group from the University of Saskatchewan is proposed.

Frank Wetterberg and Ed Brooks are coaches of the Alberta club. Workouts are held every Monday and Wednesday evenings.

Junior Group Studies Plans Salvage Drive

At a meeting of the Edmonton Junior Chamber of Commerce Wednesday night at the Corona hotel, a full turnout of members made plans to canvass every business firm in the city with a view to securing trucking facilities for the collection of garbage.

Each member received a list of names of those firms he will contact and a report on the progress of the canvass will be made at another meeting next Wednesday evening.

If the investigation proves successful, the commerce organization will proceed to set up a collection committee composed of chamber members and representatives of any other organization in the city wishing to assist.

Debunkor

EAGLES DO NOT CARRY CHILDREN AWAY

1-28

Scientists say it is all bunk to believe that an eagle can pick up a baby and fly away with it. The "heavenly object" ever known to have been carried away by an eagle was a four and a half pound jack rabbit, and the eagle could hardly get into flight with it. Tests on captured eagles have shown that a four-pound weight on each foot will keep the strongest of them from flying away. So reports of year-old babies being carried off by eagles can be no more than imagination, bird experts conclude.

CITY TRANSPORTATION GROUP MEETS

Committee Studies Added Cost University Bus Extension

Windsor Park Service With Route Changes Will Be Fully Probed

City council's transportation committee Wednesday afternoon instructed the city commissioners to furnish a report of the extra cost involved in the operation of the extension of the University bus route to serve Windsor Park district, and also instructed street railway superintendent Thomas Ferrier to investigate possible route changes which would result in obtaining more patronage for the service.

Mr. Ferrier was instructed also to inquire into a spread-up of the bus schedule to provide more frequent transportation facilities for university students attending lectures.

The Windsor Park bus service was referred to the transportation committee by the city council following a report from the city commissioners that its operation was adding materially to the street railway deficit.

The service had been put into operation as a test, but being understood that it did not attract sufficient patronage the service would be discontinued.

A delegation of residents in the Windsor Park district, led by Mr. J. C. Wilson, K.C., a member of the delegation, requested that the route be changed and instead of going down to Avenue D, the route should go straight to the Arts building. He was of the opinion that this route would be more profitable than the present route.

Store Manager Sees Progress Wartime Work

Every factory in Eastern Canada is working full-time, supplying war requirements and meeting civilian needs in a secondary program. C. N. Chubb, manager of the Hudson's Bay Company store in Edmonton, said Thursday, that his store is doing well.

Business conditions in Eastern Canada are excellent, he said, and while certain shortages exist in metals and a few other materials, the factories are working full-time.

Some of them have been taken over by the government for war production, and in others the products for civilian needs are of secondary importance to war requirements.

Substitutes available. A small delay in obtaining certain materials and fabrics is noticeable, he said, but for the most part all civilian needs can be obtained, and substitutes are available.

Rayon, bombers and nylon are replacing silks which are unavailable. The nylon factory at Kingston is expected to be in operation in March, although it is not known what quantities of products will be required for government use and for stores.

The majority of stores in eastern cities have established their own departments. Mr. Chubb said, where everything is required for black-outs, including blacked-out, special flashlights, lamps and large quantities of these items.

In addition, the "black-out" department provides everything necessary for blacking out windows, including equipment for putting out incendiary bombs, and all requirements of war and civilian populations should the emergency arise.

Eastern manufacturers are adjusting their production with great skill to keep pace with all the conditions of war and are greatly assisting the government in every way possible, without cutting short their supplies for civilian needs, he said.

HATRED OF NAZIS PLAYS ITS PART

Russia's "Secret Weapon" To Bolster Army's Morale

Propaganda Being Used Effectively To Boost Troops' Spirit In War

By A. T. STEELE

MOSCOW, Jan. 19.—Like the other warring powers, Soviet Russia has her so-called "secret weapons." One of them is a tank-destroying airplane, which has been used with considerable effect in the great counter-offensive now in progress. But the most formidable of Russia's secret weapons is an intangible one. It is a formula for courage—the thing that makes the Russian soldier the lion-hearted fighter that he is.

One of the mysteries of this war is the way the Russian morale has stood up for seven months against repeated blows of terrific power and magnitude. During the months of retreat, the Russian soldiers have not only held their ground but they have even won some of the most brilliant victories in the seven-week-old campaign.

The bravery of the individual soldier often is praised by the despatch writer against a better-armed enemy.

EXCLUSIVE

Men for men the Red army is certainly one of the world's toughest. Even the German army, with its grudging admiration of the tenacity of the Russian defense and the audacity of its counter-attacks, charges in a day when it is customary to judge the relative strength of armies solely by the number of tanks, planes and guns they possess.

What accounts for the toughness of the Russian soldiers and their comparatively high fighting spirit in battle?

"SOMETHING NEW"

A number of possible explanations immediately come to mind, such as historical tradition, Russian fatalism, or the hardening influence of environmental and experience.

Ask any Red army commander what makes his men face death unflinchingly and he will tell you that it is because of the "moral factor" that is in them. It is constantly and especially just before going into battle. This he will assure you is the strongest "secret weapon."

Each country has its own methods of stirring up the fighting spirit of its soldiers but in Bolshevik Russia the reasons are unique in nature. The Red army has a highly organized system of agitators, poets, painters, jesters, agitators and Communist activists, extending right down to the lowest ranks, whose prime function is to maintain morale at a high pitch. Even behind the front the soldiers are subjected to continuous political training in the form of lectures, printed propaganda and radio broadcasts, but when they go into the fighting line the propaganda grows in intensity.

The troops hear talk on the traditions of the Russian army and on the exploits of historical heroes. Experienced fighters who have distinguished themselves in battle are called upon to describe their adventures and give advice to the younger men. There are lectures on tactics. Successes on the front are publicized in front-line newspapers.

SHOW NAZI PRISONERS

Most meetings take place in small groups around campfires, or in dugouts. In one instance a batch of German prisoners was brought to the camp of a Russian division which was about to go into action for the first time. The idea was to show the inexperienced fighters what Germans looked like and so to remove any illusions that they were up against a race of super-men.

S. Igumov, the military commander for the crack 8th Guard Division, writes an interesting account in the Red army organ, Pravda, of how he prepared his division morally for its successful assault on the village of Krukovsk outside Moscow. The order to capture this important German position was given personally by Stalin, which gave it special significance.

"We received the order at night and had only 12 hours to prepare for the attack," Igumov relates. "We knew the Germans were strongly entrenched, that they had at least 100 tanks and that we would meet heavy mortar fire. Finally, we knew the men were exhausted and tired from previous battles and that we must re-energize them."

The attack was to begin the following morning at 10:30 o'clock. Here is what Igumov did:

During the evening he summoned the political leaders, and agitators and lectured them on their tasks. Referring to their tasks, these propaganda agitators immediately assembled the men for talks designed to prepare them for battle. In forest clearings and directly in the trenches, he listened while the agitators read out the discussion material. He himself made the rounds, in the trenches, in the forests, in the villages, the object of course, was to fire the hatred of the invaders.

Then they heard talk of how to behave while attacking under most

Max Ball Elected Branch President Of Mine Institute

Max W. Ball, president of Abasand Oil Ltd., was elected chairman of the Northern Alberta branch of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, at the year's first meeting of the branch, at the MacDonald hotel, Tuesday evening.

George Boote was elected vice-chairman and E. M. Watson was continued as secretary-treasurer for another year. The following were elected to the executive: R. Dalziel, A. C. Dunn, W. Foster, W. J. Jewett, C. F. Fisher and S. Sirovski. Mr. Ball succeeded L. E. Drummond.

Feature of the program was a talk on "Recent Developments in the P.I. McCullough Operations of Abasand Oil Ltd." by Lorne Falcous, mining engineer and geologist on the staff of Abasand Oil Ltd.

The soldiers went to bed without knowing, however, that they would go over the top the next morning after breakfast the troops were lectured again. This time they were reminded of the experience gained in recent battles, with special reference to methods of destroying enemy tanks.

"Tanks are the most dangerous of our enemies and destroyers who try to fire the field of battle," they were told.

After this were meetings of all the Communist and Informal Activists, who were informed of the forthcoming attack and reminded of the leading role the party must play in the attack.

Meanwhile during the night some political workers had been sent out to check equipment and morale. Two soldiers who showed signs of being intimidated and re-assigned to the front company. All in all, the Bolsheviks had made preparation.

Krukovsk was taken.

McLaughlin, K.C., agent for the attorney-general, for the alleged judicial district, in two-manual charges, two charges of causing grievous bodily harm and a dangerous driving charge against Alceio Foley, Laford district court.

Mr. Justice G. B. O'Connor ordered the stay of proceedings to be formally entered and the accused who was represented at the proceedings by C. M. MacLeod, K.C.

The charges arose out of a collision between a truck and motor car on the Edmonton-Elk Island-Vegreville highway on April 21, 1941, in which Mrs. Emily and Miss Edith Crumner, Clover Bar residents, received injuries from which they died shortly after their admittance to an Edmonton hospital.

Opera Singer's Engagement Is Postponed Here

Unfortunately death of Carlo Lombard, glamorous movie star, in an airplane crash two weeks ago, has been reflected here.

On Wednesday, Mrs. Ernest Madden, manager of the Women's Musical Club Celebrity Series of concerts announced that the concert scheduled to be given by Gladys Swarthout, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Association, on Feb. 12, has been postponed until April 30.

The reason follows: Miss Swarthout and Miss Lombard were close friends, almost inseparable.

Miss Swarthout, who for Metropolitan Opera and other musical commitments, must concentrate her activities at this season, in and around New York and to an outside engagement, must use the airplane as a means of transportation to save time.

Since Miss Lombard's death, Miss Swarthout has decided to take to the air and her outside engagements must wait until her regular season is finished, when she can travel by train.

Co-Operation In Use Of Trams Is Being Received

Appreciation of the co-operation of Edmonton shoppers in using street cars prior to the new rush hours was expressed Wednesday by City Commissioner R. J. Gibb.

Mr. Gibb said that the recent mild weather had resulted in a decline of patronage on the tram system, but it was expected the traffic would increase if a further cold snap was experienced. He asked that patrons continue to co-operate with the street railway in slugging the use of the system's transportation facilities.

Miss Swarthout, therefore, will sing at the Empire theatre on April 30. The Celebrity Series concert will be on March 11, when Oreg. Percel, famous British woman violinist, will appear.

"I regret the postponement of Miss Swarthout's concert, but under the circumstances, there is nothing else to do," said Mrs. Madden. "We hope for the indulgence of all our friends as it is something over which we had no control."

Liquor Possession Brings Stiff Fine

A government liquor permit for the purchase of one's favorite beverage, is not complete protection against charges of illegal possession of liquor. David Phillips, Edmonton, discovered this in police court Wednesday when he was fined $40 and costs with two months in jail optional.

He was arrested in a downtown cafe at 5:15 a.m. Wednesday when police found an unopened "milkshake of rum" in his hip pocket. Accused claimed the bottle had been bought on his permit and that he was carrying it around so his "friends" wouldn't steal it. However, when he admitted that he was on soldiers' relief and had purchased 28 bottles of liquor inside of 28 days this month, principally with money supplied by friends, the magistrate found him guilty.
